What's happened so far?

Over the past months, the E-QUALITY project has made significant strides across all core work packages, strengthening collaborative efforts and advancing the tools and methodologies that will define the future of quality assurance in European Higher Education.

■ E-QUALITY Platform Development continues

A major achievement of this period has been the development and testing of the E-QUALITY Platform, one of the project's most innovative outputs.

The platform is being designed as a centralised digital tool where universities can:

- Collect and analyse evaluation data
- Strengthen communication between QA teams, staff, and students
- Implement structured feedback loops aligned with ENQA and ESG guidelines

A first version has been developed and internally tested, supported by a user guidebook.

Feedback gathered during testing and training activities is now being applied to the platform's refinement.

What's next

Finalisation of the training modules and MOOC content

Preparation for upcoming pilot testing and dissemination activities

Reinforced engagement with universities, QA bodies, and students

The project continues to work toward a unified, innovative, and highly functional European approach to Quality Assurance in Higher Education.

Meeting in Rome

- The partners organized the 3rd Transnational Project Meeting (TPM) in Rome, Italy, where they reviewed progress, finalise upcoming deliverables, and coordinate the next steps in the implementation of the E-QUALITY Training Course and MOOC.
